GET THE GRANT YOUR PROJECT DESERVES

Help With Funding

The basic proposal-writing rules and strategies are always the same, regardless of the size of the grant for which you're applying. The bottom-line requirements for writing a successful proposal are the ability to read and follow instructions, simple math skills and an idea worth funding. Most of the work on your proposal happens before you start writing. Once you've identified a funding opportunity, you must research your project idea, the grant and the funding agency. You are far more likely to be awarded a grant if your project objectives closely match the agency's mission and the purpose of the grant. When you demonstrate this compatibility in your proposal, along with knowledge of the solution options and the funders, you build valuable credibility.

Key Grant Getting Tips To Improve Your Odds

Create a "skim-able" proposal with graphs or diagrams, bold section headers and frequent paragraph breaks to visually divide the text. Closely follow any formatting guidelines in the call for proposals. Generally, you should use 12-point Times New Roman type, with no "fancy" fonts, and highlight important text with bold, not underlining.

- PROVE that your project is needed with independent evidence/support.
- Show why your solution is worthy and meets what the funders prioritises
- State how you will prove your project is working and will add real value.
- Outline how you will clearly measure results and evaluate its success.
- Show the plans you have to sustain the project after the funding ends.

On the right side

What really pleases me most about helping projects get the funding they deserve is that lives are changed for good.

So when we successfully helped the London Coaching Foundation and Chelsea Football Club as part of a £180,000 project we knew over 300 lives would benefit with new activities, new accredited qualifications and new life chances. We would be delighted to help you to continue to change lives for good.

I know we will be able to help so get in touch and join a winning team.
